You can find our current call for submissions here Please note that we have extended the deadline for submissions to the 1st of December 2017.

Call for Submissions

Submissions are welcome from practitioners in the field, students, academics, people with first-hand experience of forced migration, and others who would like to share their contribution. You will be notified whether your contribution was accepted roughly one month after the submission deadline. We will support authors of selected articles with detailed feedback prior to publication.

How to Submit in 5 Simple Steps

Step 1: Choosing your section

The Oxford Monitor of Forced Migration is divided into five sections — the academic articles section, the policy monitor, the law monitor, the field monitor, and the first-hand section. To learn more about the different sections, please visit our explanation of the different sections here If you are unsure which section is best for your contribution, please contact our Co-Editors-in-Chief under oxmofm@googlemail.com.

Step 2: Checking the requirements of your section

Each section has slightly different requirements when it comes to word count. Submissions to the academic section can be up to 6000 words long, whereas contributions to the monitor sections and the first-hand section should be no longer than 1500 words. Please note that for the first-hand section, multimedia submissions are also welcome. Details about the different sections can be found here

Step 3: Familiarising yourself with our style guideline

In our style guideline, you will find information on our citations style as well as details such as font type and font size. For more information, please visit here

Step 4: Finalising your submission

In addition to your contribution, please send us an abstract, a short description of yourself, and a signed copy of our publishing agreement. You can find details about these three additional elements here

Step 5: Send us your submission by the 1st of December 2017!

If you are submitting an article to the academic articles section, policy monitor, field monitor, or law monitor, please send your
